Bodyâ€“self dualism is implicit in the hedonism of drug-taking. Advocates of euthanasia and the pro-choice position rely on it to make their cases. Lee and George, believing they have refuted this metaphysical view, regard these ethical positions as discredited since they entail a flawed metaphysics.

Dualism (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy) In the philosophy of mind, dualism is the theory that the mental and the physicalâ€”or mind and body or mind and brainâ€”are, in some sense, radically different kinds of thing. Because common sense tells us that there are physical bodies, and because there is intellectual pressure towards producing a unified view of the world, one could say. Dualism and Mind | Internet Encyclopedia of Philosophy Opponents typically argue that dualism is (a) inconsistent with known laws or truths of science (such as the aforementioned law of thermodynamics), (b) conceptually incoherent (because immaterial minds could not be individuated or because mind-body interaction is not humanly conceivable), or (c) reducible to absurdity (because it leads to solipsism, the epistemological belief that one's self is the only existence that can be verified and known.
